

The Global Network of Civil Society Organisations for Disaster Reduction (GNDR) is the largest international network of organisations committed to working together to improve the lives of people affected by disasters world-wide.

Our network of more than 800 member organisations in 129 countries have collected more than 100,000 perspectives on risk and resilience reflecting the local level realities of communities facing risks.

The Post-2015 DRR Framework will only have an impact if implementation takes into account real life at the frontline. Living at the frontline means dealing with unrecognised everyday disasters and interrelated risks compounded by insecurity, poverty and informality.

The benefits of being part of GNDR

GNDR is working hard towards reducing risk and increasing the resilience of the most vulnerable by:

- ✓ Strengthening the way GNDR members work together
- ✓ Enhancing engagement between civil society and other key stakeholders
- ✓ Communicating the day-to-day reality of life for people most at risk.

All this translates into how GNDR, as a network, facilitates member's interaction, helps them with advocacy efforts on different platforms at all levels, and supports our organisations working at the frontline with local risk profiles, and the implementation of action and learning programmes.
